

BSC (HONS) PSYCHOLOGY	BSC (HONS) PSYCHOLOGY WITH COUNSELLING	BSC (HONS) FORENSIC PSYCHOLOGY
Broad, integrative approach, aiming to foster scientific understanding of mind, brain, behaviour and the complex interactions between these in a critical and evaluative manner. BSc (Hons) Psychology is designed to inspire independent, active and reflective lifelong learning through innovative, diverse, effective and aligned teaching, learning and assessment. All of our Psychology courses will follow the BSc (Hons) Psychology core modules as a foundation for learning.	Broad basis of knowledge and understanding about the professional practice of counselling and associated contemporary issues. Lecturers are active in counselling practice and have years of experience that they use to help students develop self-awareness and the ability to engage in self-reflection, as well as counselling and listening skills that can be embedded into a range of workplace settings to effectively enhance existing job roles. This course does not qualify you to be a counsellor.	For those with an interest in learning how to apply psychological knowledge and theory to civil and criminal legal issues. Introduction to psychological theories, methods and processes within the context of the legal, criminal and civil justice systems. Gain a good knowledge base in the discipline of forensic psychology, and develop understanding of the role empirical evidence plays in the discipline of forensic psychology. Critically evaluate theories and debates in forensic psychology, and keep up to date with changes.

BSC (HONS) PSYCHOLOGY WITH CLINICAL SKILLS	BSC (HONS) PSYCHOLOGY WITH HEALTH AND WELLBEING	NOTES
Development of a scientific understanding of the causes of mental health problems. This will involve an ability to critically evaluate biological, psychological, and social models of mental health problems as well as understanding the role of interventions for mental health problems. Gain a set of skills for effective service user engagement and experience of the use, scoring and administering of psychometric instruments that may be used in a clinical setting. We expect graduates to be able to demonstrate reflective skills that will support learning and development as a psychologist and understand the role of empirical evidence in the discipline of clinical psychology.	Focuses on developing knowledge of how Psychology can be used as a proactive tool to try and create a healthier and happy society. Develop scientific understanding of a range of health and wellbeing areas, and the intersection between health and wellbeing, psychology, and other allied disciplines, to the explanation of health, and the promotion of healthy behaviours. Lecturers will encourage the application of empirical evidence grounded in psychology and allied disciplines to the understanding of health and wellbeing, and health-related behaviours, and help develop an understanding of the role that empirical evidence plays in health and wellbeing.	Common key selling points include: Accreditation from British psychological society (bps) across all 5 UG courses- "you will have graduate basis for chartered membership of the bps if you achieve at least a second class honours degree" Specialist facilities include: High specification research cubicles, including a soundproof cubicle Visual psychophysics laboratory Skillslab, a 30-seater it suite Powerlab psychophysiological measurement equipment A transcranial direct-current brain stimulation machine (TDCS) Private interview booths Multimedia and games research room Specialist data analysis and experiment building software Haven't included BA (hons) counselling routes, as this is usually aimed at a more mature market